Released on Origin/OA2 Records, the album consists of eleven original compositions by Green. The three tunes at the center of the album feature the trio with a string quartet. All About Jazz critic Dan McClenaghan commented, "There's nothing that adds a touch of elegance to a jazz set more than an adeptly-done string arrangement, and these are superb; violins, viola and cello in a sinuous, sometimes whispering embrace with a vibrant, top-notch piano trio, delving into Danny Green's distinguished compositions." Jazz critic Travis Rogers Jr. said of the album, “From tight arrangements to free-wheeling improvisations, this telepathic trio evolves into an equally intercommunicating quartet with Leonard Patton. If there is a group worthy of special attention and reintroduction in jazz, it is LP And The Vinyl.”

Green has been a longtime collaborator with internationally acclaimed guitarist Peter Sprague, and since 2023, he has been a full-time member of Sprague’s projects. In addition to performing at some of the top venues in Southern California, they have recorded a number of albums including All You Need Is Love: Peter Sprague Plays The Beatles, Estrada Do Sol: Peter Sprague Plays Jobim, Hurricane Country: Peter Sprague Plays Grusin and Klugh, One Fell Swoop, Christmas Time Is Here: Peter Sprague Plays Vince Guaraldi, So Far Away: Peter Sprague Plays Carole King, and several others.

Green’s latest recording is his first full-length solo piano recording, entitled Let the Music Happen. The album grew from the simple realization that some of his most inspired playing comes when there is no plan at all, when discovery takes over and the music finds its own way. Recorded over two days, Green brings together recent compositions and favorite standards, along with a freely imagined arrangement of The Beatles’ “A Day in the Life,” revealing the melodic imagination and expansive pianism that runs through his catalog of work. Moving effortlessly between intimate reflection and flights of dazzling invention, Green creates an intriguing program filled with personality and warmth. The album released in October, 2026 on Origin/OA2 Records.
